The Research Presented

Thesis Title

Governance of Engineering Projects and Its Role in Supporting the Transition toward Smart and Sustainable Cities:

This study examines the role of engineering project governance in supporting the transition toward smart and sustainable cities, through a case study of Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, within the framework of Saudi Vision 2030. The research adopts a descriptive-analytical approach supported by a case study to evaluate governance frameworks applied in urban engineering projects, focusing on decision-making mechanisms, transparency, accountability, risk management, and stakeholder integration. The study investigates how engineering project governance contributes to improving project implementation efficiency, enhancing urban design quality, promoting digital transformation, and optimizing resource utilization. It also identifies key institutional and organizational challenges that hinder effective governance practices. The findings indicate that the integrated application of engineering project governance principles is a critical factor in the success of smart city projects and the achievement of urban sustainability, contributing to improved quality of life and enhanced urban competitiveness in Riyadh.
